8105 ligature; double letter — Two or more letters joined together and forming one type character as fi, ffi, œ, æ, etc. For metal type the word should be *logotype. In German type composition ligatures must always be used as both characters belong to the stem of the word. The flexional yet does not influence the ligature, as e.g., in: Stoff, Stoffe, Hoffnung, hoffen, streifig, flämisch, Haft, haften, künftig, Schrift, Schriften, Sitz, sitzen. On the other hand a ligature may not be used when it stands between two stems of words belonging together, as, e.g., in: Schaf/fell, Kauf/interesse, höf/lich, Auf/lage, Hof/tor, Auf/trag, Ent/ziehung, ent/zwei. A particularity is found in the conjuncture of three characters each of which may form a ligature. In these cases the limit of the syllable is decisive, as in: Raf/finade, auf/fliegen, muf/fig. In the word Schiffahrt the ligature must always be used, because one of the three consonants f is left out. In compounds of words as Sauerstoff-flasche, two ligatures ff and fl are set. In words like Geschafft the use of the ligatures ff and ft is permitted. In those cases the ligature is placed in the end of the word, because this gives a better look. Thus this word is composed as Geschaf/ft. In interspaced words, set in Lineals (Antique type) no ligatures are used. In broken types (Fraktur, see app. no. 2) on the contrary, ch, ck, tz and st are mostly not interspaced. However, in view of a better look of interspaced slugs of broken types (Fraktur), the ligatures are spaced, especially for the major body sizes, that is to say, the ligature st with lesser space, in order to avoid a bad composition style. œ for single sounds, is in GB generally employed in English, French, Latin and old English words. But the modern tendency (as in the O.E. dictionary) is to use separate letters. See also quaint character, diphthong.

The printing design is greasy and ink-receptive, while the balance of the stone or plate is dampened with water to make it ink repellent. Name derived from litho and graphy, or stone-writing, as limestone slabs were originally used as lithographic printing formes. Invented in 1796 by Alois Senefelder (1771-1834). In direct lithography the paper is printed from a reversed design on a stone or plate; in *offset lithography the design is first printed on a rubber-covered cylinder and offset on to the paper.

8524 magnetic tape; mag tape — Although cartridges and cassettes may be described as magnetic tape, the term generally refers to computer compatible tape onto which data are written as magnetic charges (in the form of bits) across the tape width. In this way each character can be read or written at one time rather than serially. Industry compatible magnetic tape is usually written at a density of 800 bpi (bits per inch), which really means 800 eight-level (plus parity) characters per inch, although 1600 bpi tape is increasingly common. Older computers often made use of 7 tracks (6 bits plus parity) tape at densities of 250, 300 or perhaps 500 bpi. Magnetic tape transports read and/or write on this tape at a rate expressed in inches per second (ips). Dec tape (frequently used on Digital Equipment systems) is not industry compatible and offers certain "indexable" features not otherwise available.

9156 moving head disk — Computer peripheral which provides on-line data storage which can be accessed in a random (e.g., non-sequential) fashion. The read/write head of the disk moves across the disk platter to the track upon which the desired data are stored, according to a "map" or "index" which indicates the location of the data. The map or index is either stored in core or on a section of the disk itself. The read/write head on the disk floats on a cushion of air above the surface of the disk. It is never in contact with the disk itself unless the air cushion is broken and the head crashes on to the surface of the disk. Moving head disks provide slower access than *fixed head disks, since in the former there is only one read/write head per surface and in the latter instance there is one read/write head per track, and consequently no movement of the read/write head from track to track is necessary. Moving head disks usually provide more storage per dollar of investment than fixed head disks. Information is filed on a disk by track and by sector within a track. A sector is always a fixed physical size, as 400 bytes in length. Information which cannot be stored on one sector does not necessarily flow over to the following sector. The operating system or file management program may write an address at the end of one sector indicating where to go to find the continuation of the data stream. This technique of typing information together is called index sequential.

9525 offset lithography; offset — Indirect printing method in which the inked image on the pressplate is first printed onto a rubber blanket, then in turn offsets the inked impression on to the sheet of paper. Although it almost certainly began with Voirin in France, several claims have been made. But it is quite certain that the first branch of the trade to benefit was metal decoration. As early as 1875, R. Barday was responsible in England for converting a direct flat-bed machine into an offset machine by adding an extra cylinder. This machine took the impression from the stone on to the surface of the old impression cylinder covering, and then transferred it to the sheet of metal which was pressed against it by the new cylinder. This mixture of old and new, flat-bed offset and direct rotary, continued till 1904 when George Mann & Company produced a rotary offset tin printing machine which was simply a direct rotary machine with an additional cylinder. Ira Rubel was at this time designing a rotary offset machine for paper printing in the US, so that the turn of the century was a period of intensive activity and interest.

10177 pH — Means of expressing the degree of acidity or alkalinity of a solution, originally defined as the logarithm of the reciprocal of the hydrogen ion concentration in gram equivalents per litre of solution  $\text{pH} = -\log(\text{H}^+)$  and this is in many cases approximately correct. In some cases it is seriously in error. Actually pH values are obtained by measuring the potential E of galvanic cells of the type (Pt) $\text{H}_2$ ; solution x, saturated KCl, reference electrode; and using the value of E in the equation

$\text{pH} = (\text{E} - \text{E}_0)/(2.306 \text{ RT/F})$  in which  $\text{E}_0$  is a constant depending upon the nature of the reference electrode, and R, T and F are respectively the fundamental gas constant, the absolute temperature and the faraday. Commercial pH meters, however, are calibrated to read pH directly and no calculation is necessary. pH is the abbreviation for the Latin pondus hydrogenii, i.e., weight or mass of hydrogen. The term is said to originate from Sören Peter L. Sørensen (1868). Originally the H was an inferior character.

10178 pH-control — Measuring the acidity or alkalinity of a solution or substance by determining its hydrogen ion content. The extraction time specified is one hour at room temperature. For measuring the pH a calomel and a glass electrode are put into the extract.

10533 points per pound — Term sometimes applied to the bursting strength of a paper.

10534 point system — The three principal point systems in use today differ basically and in decimal detail. The British-American system, universally adopted by English speaking countries, has for its standard of measurement the 0.166 pica and the 0.01383 point or one twelfth of the pica (thus 1,000 lines of pica or 12-point matter measure 166 inches). The Didot system used in most countries of continental Europe has the cicero as its basic unit. The cicero equals 12 "corps" or 0.178 in and the Didot "corps" or point measures exactly 0.01483. The mediaan system sometimes encountered has a "corps" or point measurement of 0.01374, the mediaan em or cicero measures 0.165. For metal type the 12-point system is the most ideal, because 12 can be divided by 2, 3, 4, 6 and 8. In the metric system dividing is only possible by 2 and 5. For photographic typesetting reducing or enlarging has no limits, so here a \*typographic point system is not important. However, Eurograf (Organisation of printing federations in the EEC) accepted a unit based on the \*SI. Since January 1978 the Didot point is fixed at 0.375 mm. About the increments of 0.1 mm (ISO) or 0.25 mm (Eurograf) there was up to now no consensus of opinion. In the pica system 12 pt  $\approx 4.21752 \times 10^{-3}$  m. See also cicero, point, app. no. 1.

10709 precedence code — Signal in the input stream (usually a unique character or code, but also a standard one out of context) which denotes a change of mode, so that what follows represents a different condition. For example, a "shift" precedence code signals that until further notice all characters will be identified as in upper case. A supershift precedence code signifies that one or more following codes are to be identified as non-standard or unique characters grouped together more or less arbitrarily to extend the fount character repertoire. A precedence code may signify a locking or a non-locking condition. In the latter case the precedence code identifies a unique character only for the next code in the text stream or until a predefined condition obtains, whereas a "locking" precedence code signals that the special case will govern until further notice.

The pre-tension is measured in kilograms, according to the following formulae: for light-weight formes  $3 LD^{1/2}$  for middle-weight formes  $6 LD^{1/2}$ , and for heavy-weight formes  $9 LD^{1/2}$ , where L is the distance between the bed bearers in cm and D the cylinder diameter in cm.

10918 programmable read-only memory; PROM — While read-only memories (roms) have information to be stored "built into them" at the time they are manufactured, proms are programmed at a later date by a special-program loader. This makes them particularly useful for customizing a product to the user's specifications. Generally speaking, proms like roms, cannot be "un-programmed" once they have been loaded; however, a new type of prom which is programmed by exposure to ultraviolet light can, in fact, be "re-programmed" by someone with the right equipment.

10922 programmer — Person who prepares a sequence of instructions in a computer language to perform operations on input to get a desired output. Programmers use languages, such as cobol, fortran, assembler, etc., as opposed to typesetting mark-up personnel who use commands supplied first by a programmer to achieve their desired results. This is a common mistake in nomenclature in the typesetting field. A programmer is sometimes called a system analyst although the latter may deal more specifically with problems of definition and the former with problems of implementation.

image on a photoengraving permits local etching; the Hausleiter-Sportelli method employs double exposures on carbon tissue. These methods can hardly be classified as masking, although their object is similar.

11548 reversal — Phenomenon that, if areas of a photographic emulsion layer are exposed to increasing amounts of light, the densities produced after development will not increase indefinitely but will reach a limit and then, with continued exposure, will diminish somewhat. This is known as reversal or *solarization. (The term solarization was originally given to highly over-exposed print-out images in which a change of reflectance of the image occurred, producing bronzed shadows.) Thus, after a certain degree of exposure has been reached, further exposure of the photographic grain tends to destroy the developable state induced by the earlier part of the exposure. The term reversal should include all positive-working photographic effects.

If the lesser is placed before the greater, the lesser is deducted from the greater, IX = 9; XC = 90. Sometimes figures are represented by the contraction of other characters as in CIO, (1000), or in IOCXXVi, (1626); in which CIO is a typographic form for the Roman M and IO for the Roman D. Thus: DC or IOC = 600; CM = DCCC = IOCCCC = 900; MM = CIOCIO = 2000.

11691 Ross effect — Photographic effect which can be measured when determining densities with an interference device. Use is made of the capability of two light rays to damp down or to intensify (light interference) for the measurement of small film thicknesses or changes in film thicknesses, under predetermined conditions. The determination exists of making out whether heavily exposed image areas after drying have shrunk more than other less heavily exposed image areas. This shrinkage is explained by the tanning of the gelatine due to the concentrated oxidation products on the exposed areas. The tanning causes the gelatine to heavy concentration during drying.

Since the composition of inks has changed, an instrument has been developed (1977) to indicate the point at which an ink film will be rub-dry. It consists mainly of a soft plastic foil over which a sheet of offsetting paper is placed. The test strips (12 strips, 35 mm wide), taken from a press sheet, are clamped to a metal plate and placed with their face against the set-off paper, without contacting it. The plastic foil is pressed with a bar against the offsetting paper when the instrument is switched on, the bar travelling at intervals. During bar transport there is no contact.

A coherent system of scientific units, which is divided in 7 basic quantities: length (l), mass (m), time (t), electric current (I), thermodynamic temperature (T), quality of matter (M), light intensity (I). The system is based on the metre (m), kilogramme (kg), second (s), ampere (A), kelvin (K), mol (mol), and candela (cd). From these all other units can be derived, that is: coulomb, farad, henry, hertz, joule, lumen, lux, newton, ohm, pascal, siemens, tesla, volt, watt, weber. See these terms in the basic table of this dictionary. Not to the SI belong: acre, ångström, are, bushel, drachm, dram, erg, foot, gallon, gill, grain, horsepower, hundred-weight, inch, minim, ounce, peck, pint, pound, quart, quarter, scruple, stone, ton, yard. For the conversion of these units, see app. no. 7a. The SI is adopted by the General Conference of Weights and Measures (CGPM) and endorsed to the International Standards Organization (ISO). The system is indicated in all languages with SI. Since January 1978 it is obligatory in the countries of the European Common Market.

It is sometimes confused with consistency by thinking an ink with high tack has high consistency and vice versa. This may be true for some inks, but not for others. Tack and consistency describe separate characteristics.

13636 teletypesetting — System, introduced in 1932, whereby all the functions of a hot-metal line-casting machine are controlled by 6-level

tape, which is read by an operating unit attached to the keyboard of the line-caster. The primary tape is prepared as a preliminary operation on a perforating keyboard. A reduction of keystrokes and/or operator decisions may be achieved by computer processing. The advantages are faster operation of line-casters and improved performance by the keyboard operator because he is not involved in controlling the functions of the linecaster. The abbreviation TTS for the teletypesetter was used until 1969. Since then it is used by the manufacturers (Fairchild) to designate Total Type-setting System. See also teletypesetter.

14820 word processing — Use of automated typewriters or similar devices for initial input, for subsequent revision, and for final output.

14821 word wrap — Feature, implemented by hardware or software, whereby an entire word must fit on a line (as on a VDT) rather than to be broken arbitrarily between two lines. When additional characters are inserted into a line, causing text to the right of the insertion to move over, word wrap will push any word off one line and onto the next when one or more characters of that word will not fit. A domino effect will thus be observed with respect to succeeding lines. Word wrap may be implemented on a character-by-character basis at the time of the initial input or when insertions are made or, in some cases, only when the material on the screen is "refitted" by specific command. A similar feature is offered by the software driving some line printers, such as a Versatec, so that the hard copy or printout so provided will correspond line-for-line with the otherwise unformatted text displayed on the VDT screen.

When cut in half two copies will result.
